Tories, as a rule, hold that opinion; but we cannot go the length of declaring that a sincere & bolitionist, such as Lord Palmerston undoubtedly was it was probably the only conviction he had over which his will had no power-could not honestly be a Tory. The writer excludes the casuistry of editorship from his remarks, and he obviously considers that the commonest of all difficulties, intellectual disagreement between editor and contributor, is now-m-days always settled by the editor selecting the writer who is most nearly in accord with him, but he does not adequately discuss the question of indifferentism. There is more indifferentism among journalists than be thinks. Thousands of points are raised in journals overy year, and some of them important points, upon which the majority of men, trained journalists, included, have no definite views at all, are as caroless as most women which way the matter goes. he not, when utterly indifferent, write to order, simply as a matter of business, supplying an article in demand just like any other dealer? We can see no moral objection, except that such a Victoria Fire Insurance Company's Shares—practice tends gradually to induce an affected 2120 per share. indifference, which may by degrees degenerate into literary swordsmanship,—the worst vice, wo agree with the writer, that can degrade a journalist. But still there are men who, profoundly indifferent upon some points are sensitivo upon others, and it seems to us that, as regards the former, they are fully at liberty to follow the policy of the paper which employs them, just as the mak and file of a party are fully at liberty to swallow an unpleasant bill which their lander deems imperative. The indifference must, of course, be real, and not simulated; but if it is real, the mental enbordination implied in taking the paper's side does seem to us immoral, or to approximate in any degree to literary swordsmanship, any -word than it does for a journalist to state fair: ly and frankly the side of a question be dislikes, but has not yet become absolutely convinced upon. As a rate, we should say there are, with every journalist, half-a-dozen subjects upon which, if he palters with his convictions in any way, he degrades himself; and one or two upon which eyen silence is more or less immoral, and a very much larger number upon which he may safely and conscientionally be a mero professional, merging himself in the paper of whose general theory he approves. Of course, this licence does not apply to editors, because their responsibility is personal, but it does to journalists who have confidence in the general drift of their employer's mind. There is a far nicer and more difficult question of casnistry than any the essayist has raised which remains still to be determined.

THE CASUISTRY OF JOURNALISM.

What is the liability of an editor to his personal friends? Strictly speaking, he should have none; should attack his own father if he disupproves his appeches, or lash his wife's last book if he thinks it rubblish. This is, no doubt, abstractly true, as it is also abstractly true to steal an epigram from an Australian who once wrote a pamphlet on the but in practice men will not comply with either L. adopted and confirmed at the Extraor- to its pages enables a person who undercondition, and such demands would drive all dinary Meetings of Shareholders held on the stands. We suspect that in the case, as in all others wobave quoted, the practice of Parliament is still the best guide, and that the journalist is bound, as the statesman would be bound, to do his duty, and take the consequences. He might be a little more gentle in his language, a little more apologetio in his tone, but the attack must not be deprived of its efficiency for any personal consideration whatsoover.—Spectator
